Industrial scale farming has drastically increased crop yield in the US, but has decreased food security due to boom-and-bust style harvests.

Urban food systems such as p-patches and farm-to-school programs aim to fill in the gaps, making sure local families stay fed.

This project aims to address issues urban food systems face, and how to address them with innovative design and community outreach.

December 2nd, Online, 4:30PM-7:30PM