

Chelsey Evans

Chelsey Evans recently began a role leading ecological impact for Etsy as part of the company's Impact team. She previously led environmental sustainability for Nordstrom on its CSR team, where she found ways for Nordstrom to serve customers while driving systems change on social and environmental issues across its value chain – as a retailer, a producer of goods, a service provider, an employer and a community member. She was responsible for environmental sustainability strategy and goal-setting including climate change, the environmental impact of products and circularity. She also manages Nordstrom's CSR and ESG reporting.

Prior to Etsy and Nordstrom, Chelsey worked on sustainability strategy and crisis communication for retailers including Gap Inc. and Target Corporation, and managed partnerships and communications at several nonprofit organizations. She holds a Master of International Business from the Fletcher School at Tufts University and a Bachelor of Arts in Communication from Pittsburg State University.
