How does power play a role in natural resource management? Who decides what is worthy of preservation? Who participates?

In this class students will:

- Critically examine strategies of resource managers to integrate local communities and cultures in natural resource stewardship
- Recognize the interconnections between natural resources, environmental management, and issues related to race, gender, and class in our society.
- Examine the potential for more socially just and ecologically sustainable approaches to natural resource stewardship

Environmental Studies majors can use this to fulfill the Human & Social Dimensions requirement.

Contact info: Ana Wieman, enviradv@uw.edu