This spring’s PoE quarterly seminar series will examine how ideas about what constitutes a sustainable business have changed significantly over the last 30 years and have become a currently hot topic of debate. The one-credit seminar will consist of weekly talks via Zoom by visiting speakers from a variety of business sectors, with a question-answer session following each presentation. Speakers will come from businesses large and small, such as Amazon and PCC, and from consulting firms and the Foster Business School. Topics will range from types and rights of businesses, frameworks for and trade-offs in sustainability, energy and agriculture, with an increasing focus on climate change as the quarter progresses. Students will be expected to post on Canvas a written response for each session.
